A Defining Moment

Bradley was just 23 years old when the bomb exploded, shattering his life in an instant. He was working as a loan officer in the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building when the blast occurred.

The force of the explosion hurled Bradley through the air and buried him under a pile of rubble. He was trapped for hours, his body battered and broken. When he was finally rescued, he had lost his right leg and suffered severe burns and other injuries.

Overcoming Adversity

Bradley's physical wounds were only the beginning of his ordeal. In the aftermath of the bombing, he struggled with post-traumatic stress disorder and depression. He also faced challenges in adapting to his new life as an amputee.

But Bradley refused to be defeated. With the support of his family, friends, and community, he embarked on a determined journey of recovery. He underwent extensive rehabilitation and therapy, and eventually learned to walk with a prosthetic leg.

Finding Meaning in Tragedy

Bradley's experience of the Oklahoma City bombing profoundly changed his life. He realized the preciousness of life and the importance of living each day to the fullest.

Bradley has used his platform as a survivor to advocate for peace and understanding. He speaks out against violence and extremism, and he works to support other victims of terrorism.
