In a world where girls are often told to be quiet and conform, the "Good Night Stories for Rebel Girls" series is a refreshing antidote. These books tell the stories of extraordinary women who have made a difference in the world, inspiring young readers to dream big and follow their passions.

One of the latest additions to the series is "Dr. Wangari Maathai Plants a Forest," which tells the story of the Nobel Peace Prize winner who founded the Green Belt Movement. Maathai was a Kenyan environmentalist who dedicated her life to planting trees in Africa. She believed that trees were essential for the health of the planet and for the well-being of people. Through her work, she inspired millions of people to plant trees and to fight for environmental justice.

The chapter book about Maathai is written in a simple and engaging style that is perfect for young readers. The book is full of beautiful illustrations and inspiring quotes from Maathai herself. It is a wonderful way to introduce children to the life and work of this remarkable woman.
