In the annals of true crime, few names are as infamous as that of Rose West. Together with her husband, Fred West, she committed some of the most heinous crimes in British history. Their victims were young women, often vulnerable and desperate, who were lured to the Wests' home on Cromwell Street in Gloucester. There, they were subjected to unspeakable torture and degradation before being murdered and their bodies disposed of.

For years, the Wests' crimes went undetected. But in 1994, their daughter Heather escaped from their clutches and reported them to the police. The subsequent investigation uncovered a house of horrors, and the Wests were eventually arrested and charged with 12 murders. Fred West took his own life in prison before he could be brought to trial, but Rose West was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Rose West: The Making of a Monster is the definitive account of these horrific crimes. Based on exclusive interviews with survivors, investigators, and experts, this book delves into the twisted minds of the Wests and explores the factors that led them to commit such unspeakable acts.
