The Interplay of Love and Betrayal

Harry Harlow (1959) "The Monkey Love experiments"

- Harlow evaluated whether feeding or contact comfort was more important to infant attachment.
- The young animals were "raised" by two kinds of surrogate monkey mother machines.
- One mother was made of soft terry cloth, the other made of wire mesh.

At the heart of Monkey Love lies the tumultuous relationship between two siblings, Jake and Emily. Jake, a successful doctor, struggles with his feelings of inadequacy and jealousy towards his sister, a brilliant artist. Emily, on the other hand, grapples with her own inner demons and her brother's perceived betrayal. Bosworth eloquently portrays the complexities of sibling rivalry and the profound impact it can have on the individuals involved.

The Power of Family Bonds

Beyond the sibling relationship, Monkey Love also explores the broader dynamics of family. The novel delves into the secrets, resentments, and unspoken bonds that shape family members' lives. Bosworth deftly reveals the intricate web of relationships that connect individuals and the ways in which these bonds can both support and burden.

The Importance of Friendship

Interspersed within the familial drama, Monkey Love also weaves a poignant tale of friendship. Jake finds solace and support in his close friend, Sam, while Emily forms an unlikely bond with a fellow artist. Bosworth portrays the transformative power of friendship and the ways in which it can provide a lifeline in times of adversity.
